PATRICK HOLDAWAY

Superintendent

Superintendent Patrick Holdaway, from the City of London Police, has led the National Business Crime Centre (NBCC) since December 2018. Prior to that Patrick was the business crime lead in Hampshire Constabulary where he spent 26 years prior to transferring to the City of London Police in 2021.

During this time Patrick has worked across policing and government to raise the issues that affect business, developing and sharing best practice to prevent violence and tackle organised crime. Recently this has seen Patrick help develop and implement the recently launched Retail Crime Action Plan. Through Patrick's leadership the NBCC has been formally recognised on a number of occasions for its work supporting policing, private security and the retail and transport sectors.
